Anthony Eden resigns the British foreign secretaryship in order to devote his whole time to government leadership in the House of Commons, as is reported to be scheduled, it will put squarely to rest the qualifications as possible successor to the great Churchill as prime minister.

That will be the significance of the move if it eventuates. Many British prophets feel that Churchill's historic task of leading his people through the valley of "blood, tears and sweat," from defeat to glorious victory, is drawing to a close, and the chiefs of the Conservative party are said to feel that the comparatively youthful Eden, at 46, is the man to shoulder the burden, and they're going to put him through the mill to find out.

One important side-light is that if and when Eden takes the helm it will bring the so-called "Young Conservatives" into the government, and they're going to put him through the mill to find out.

So far as foreign affairs are concerned, there's no reason to anticipate any material change. The foreign minister doesn't, by any means, have a place in the sun. Churchill belongs to the old guard. So did a long string of predecessors.

Maybe it's wrong to call that a side-light. England, like the rest of the world, is in the verge of great changes, and coupled with these will be the post-war problems of reconstruction. It certainly is a period when political adaptability and correct perspective will be at a premium.

HOW WAR NEEDS EAT UP U. S. OIL

Estimated proves U. S. oil reserves on Jan. 1, 1944, was 20,564,000,000 barrels, 200-fifths of world's total, BUT...

At present rate of wartime consumption, U. S. oil reserves will be exhausted in 14 years. Even at average normal rate of consumption during 1939-40, reserves would be exhausted in 10 or 17 years.

The picture shows the significance of the move if it eventuates. Wild Wa of Burma Ready to Lop Off Heads of Japanese

By CHARLES A. GRUMICH
Somewhere in Burma—The Wild Wa is doing his best with the hope of toppling off heads among Japanese leaders.

He has enlisted enthusiastically on the Allied side against any Japanese intrusion into his remote highland domain.

His day is his purpose, knife, a chisel-shaped, razor-edged weapon constantly at his side. The Wild Wa is so self-sufficient, and perhaps so handy with the knife, that the British for years euphemistically listed his homeland as "unconquered territory."

Patience missionary work begun by an American Baptist and carried on by his sons, and concurrent introduction of the law of the west, has turned the dith almost exclusively to cutting bamboo and other utilitarian uses.

The taming of the Wild Wa was undertaken many years ago by William Marcus Young, who spent 41 years here, establishing a good name in the Wa and Shan states and baptizing more than 40,000 hill people. When he died, he left the Wild Wa to his jungle-bound sons, Harold and Vincent, both now serving as advisers to the armed forces.

They have carried on the elder Young's constant discouragement of head-hunting until it is practically eliminated. No white man is known to have lost a head to the Wild Wa since the '30s.

With the war came the necessity of warning the Wild Wa of the Japanese. Young, now 70, has been sent somewhere doing highly secret missions, had devised a written language from the phonetic of the Wild Wa and the English alphabet.

Essential, there was the "jungle telegraph" by which the character of any interloper is transmitted far and wide. The Wild Wa transmits by runners and by morse code signal shot by machine-made gunpowder. Three mortar shots ringing through the hills.

He shows jungle-bound soldiers how to get along and generally does the bidding of the British in the dropping line. He insists, for instance, that a python will eat a man's head, but that a cobra will eat a man's head.

Jack was off on a week's spree in Bombay...

BY THE middle of December—and in spite of the yegg's warning—Jack seemed almost restored to good health. He had had nothing strong to drink and was not morose. Then one day a shipboard drinking companion called on him and he disappeared from the hotel. He was off on a week's spree. When he returned, he promised the doctor not to have another lapse but two days later he again vanished. The treatments were discontinued. Jack sailed for America and seemed very gay in the bar.

Barymore was entering the last seven years of a life-time. During his ten years in Hollywood he had made $2,000,000 and spent almost all of it with lavish hand. Truly he was now in the winter of discontent. Doctors moved out of his Beverly Hills home.

U.S. Air Heads Had Very Close Call

London, March 31.—(Delayed)—It would have been an accident, but an American Negro pilot came within a hair of wiping out the entire high command of the RAF some time ago in Italy.

It happened this way: Air Chief Marshal Sir Charles Portal, Air Chief Marshal Sir Arthur Tedder, Commander in Chief, Middle East, and Air Vice Marshal Broadhurst, with their staffs, were standing at the end of a rough make-shift airstrip watching Hawkebays of the 8th Negro Light Bomber Squadron take off loaded with two 500 pound bombs each.

As one plane lifted off the ground near the conglomeration of air bases the motor of the ship failed. It crashed 20 yards away and skidded into a ditch, scraping the bombs on the ground while privates and air marshals hugged the ground and stepped one very frightened pilot who said, when he could get his breath back, "If those things had gone off, I would have gone to heaven with a lot of high-powered company."

The British desire to make American feel at home sometimes has ramifications. But while beef may be lacking, ingenuity is not. A sign on a small restaurant off famed Oxford circus reads: "Lobster hamburgers."

Underground reports say the Nazi state secret, "Forest," was banned except by special permission because it was a reminder of the past. While the ban was on, an old Russian song in a German translation, "God, who made the world," had come to favor. Now the Gestapo has issued orders banning it and has been restoring the "Forest" song.

Dutch and Norwegian governments have been perturbed that Britain and the United States have not waited the British-American plan ahead signal.

Li, Gen. Carl A. Spaatz, commander of the U. S. Strategic Air Force and Lt. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, Allied air commander in the Mediterranean, and their staffs were together on all matters except policy. Each staff considers it a matter of personal honor to see that the visiting general and his cohorts get a first-class trimming. Occasionally a hapless correspondent gets caught in the jaws of this star pincer movement and badly mangled. I know about this for sure.

Eaker is one of the English players in the army and he is seldom caught. But on one trip recently he went down $250 and all was paid in cash. He was down another $75 and the grin on the Spaatz side became ever wider. In the last hour of play, however, Eaker not only made up all of his losses but had retrieved a $500 check his subordinate officer, Col. "Jack" Whitney, millionaire horseman, had been forced to disgorge the night before.

That's the reason why a little 125-page pocket booklet, issued by the semi-official "Japan Soldier," is an important item to any one who wants to study the Japanese. It's a distillation of about everything that military men have learned about the Japanese. "What kind of a man is he? What goes on behind his Oriental front?"

Designed primarily for use by the men who are going to have to fight the Japs, the booklet is sprinkled generously with pictures, dodges literary flights, and is a kind of a guide to the Japanese mind.

For example, one section describes the Jap officers so that they will be recognizable to any U. S. soldier. The last line is "It is for infiltration, camouflage and patience, and each of these three arts have been developed for the particular type of fighting that has to be done in the Pacific."

All these things and many more are in "The Jap Soldier." It's a literary gem but a lot of military men are saying that it is a pity it could be circulated to all the folks who are beginning to think the battle of the Pacific may be just a sideshow to Europe.

It is a safe bet that part of the "refurbishing" job on "Signs" has to do with making it conform to today's movie code. Not that, a dozen years later, I can recall any "Days of Glory." It's just that pictures of that vintage, viewed in the light of today's code, still bring things to make the censors scream.

Today in a studio projection in Hollywood, "A Day of Glory" is being shown. It's a picture of a man in a suit, looking surprised.

Night for the Marrow

A CASE AGAINST THE KLAN

THE Judge was not as tall as his grandfather, though more stocky. His slight excess of weight was in a carefully fitted black suit, the coat of which was of the frock type which formerly distinguished important office-holders from those who put them in office. His vest, also black, had a wide piping around the collar.

He brushed the argument away as far as I had ever heard, though, he hadn't heard very much. It wasn't until many years later that I learned what was in the back of Old Jan's mind as he talked to Judge McManis.

"What?" the judge replied thoughtfully, "I don't know that I agree with you, but I can't see anything particularly funny in the remark. It might have been a good idea to ask for the name of the person who said that."

Like Samson, his glorious white hair was the judge's only weakness. His costume, which today was a black suit, was a reminder of the past. While the ban was on, an old Russian song in a German translation, "God, who made the world," had come to favor. Now the Gestapo has issued orders banning it and has been restoring the "Forest" song.

Each staff considers it a matter of personal honor to see that the visiting general and his cohorts get a first-class trimming. Occasionally a hapless correspondent gets caught in the jaws of this star pincer movement and badly mangled. I know about this for sure.

Eaker is one of the English players in the army and he is seldom caught. But on one trip recently he went down $250 and all was paid in cash. He was down another $75 and the grin on the Spaatz side became ever wider. In the last hour of play, however, Eaker not only made up all of his losses but had retrieved a $500 check his subordinate officer, Col. "Jack" Whitney, millionaire horseman, had been forced to disgorge the night before.

That's the reason why a little 125-page pocket booklet, issued by the semi-official "Japan Soldier," is an important item to any one who wants to study the Japanese. It's a distillation of about everything that military men have learned about the Japanese. "What kind of a man is he? What goes on behind his Oriental front?"

Designed primarily for use by the men who are going to have to fight the Japs, the booklet is sprinkled generously with pictures, dodges literary flights, and is a kind of a guide to the Japanese mind.

For example, one section describes the Jap officers so that they will be recognizable to any U. S. soldier. The last line is "It is for infiltration, camouflage and patience, and each of these three arts have been developed for the particular type of fighting that has to be done in the Pacific."

All these things and many more are in "The Jap Soldier." It's a literary gem but a lot of military men are saying that it is a pity it could be circulated to all the folks who are beginning to think the battle of the Pacific may be just a sideshow to Europe.

It is a safe bet that part of the "refurbishing" job on "Signs" has to do with making it conform to today's movie code. Not that, a dozen years later, I can recall any "Days of Glory." It's just that pictures of that vintage, viewed in the light of today's code, still bring things to make the censors scream.

Today in a studio projection in Hollywood, "A Day of Glory" is being shown. It's a picture of a man in a suit, looking surprised.
